

She Was Not a Goddess: The Adèle Archive

A six-player feminist sci-fi Jubensha-inspired participatory archive trial.

PARTICIPATORY ARCHIVE TRIAL · 6 PLAYERS + FACILITATOR · APPROX. 3 HOURS, ADAPTABLE · ENGLISH ADAPTATION / BILINGUAL DEVELOPMENT · IN DEVELOPMENT

CORE PITCH

In a future civilisation that remembers Adèle Spet as a willing Mother Goddess, six participants enter a damaged archive and examine the evidence left behind. The question is not only how Adèle died, but how a civilisation learned to use her body, research, name, death, and memory after she could no longer speak for herself.

PREMISE

Adèle Spet was a scientist before she became a sacred figure. Her research made possible a new form of survival, but the civilisation that depended on her gradually turned need into reverence, reverence into obligation, and obligation into control. Official history calls her death a voluntary sacrifice. The archive suggests something more difficult: that her final act may have been a refusal of the system that had made her body public property. This project asks what happens when a complex person is made easier to worship than to hear.

PLAYER EXPERIENCE

Players handle documents, testimonies, fragments, and conflicting institutional records. They do not simply uncover a hidden truth; they decide what kind of truth can be responsibly released. The experience is document-led and low-pressure, emphasising reading, discussion, ethical judgement, and collective interpretation rather than performance-heavy roleplay.

FORMAT

- Players: 6 players + facilitator
- Duration: approx. 3 hours, adaptable
- Space: tabletop, chamber setup, or facilitated reading room
- Facilitation: one facilitator / GM
- Materials: character files, archive fragments, evidence, verdict structure
- Interaction: document-led discussion, testimony, ethical choice

THEMES

Institutional memory · Bodily autonomy · Myth-making · Archive ethics · Testimony · Refusal

WHY IT FITS

The project is designed around documents, testimony, ethical choice, and facilitated discussion, making it adaptable to an English-language Jubensha-adjacent or immersive narrative context. It does not rely on a conventional murder mystery structure. Its contained setup - a table, facilitator, printed evidence, and a clear verdict structure - makes it suitable for workshop development, reading sessions, or later immersive staging.

DEVELOPMENT STATUS

The project is currently in development and has not been publicly released. This one-page pitch is intended as a concise overview rather than a full script submission. A short sample kit can be prepared upon request.

CONTENT NOTE

Content note: death, captivity, bodily autonomy, institutional control, religious language, memory manipulation, grief, and the political use of motherhood. Fictional institutional language appears as part of the system being critiqued and is not authorial endorsement.

Who has the right to speak for Adèle?