

The Adèle Archive: The First Gospel

A 2-3 player text-editing interactive experience about how a woman's refusal becomes scripture.

TEXT-EDITING INTERACTIVE EXPERIENCE · 2-3 PLAYERS + OPTIONAL FACILITATOR · APPROX. 45-75 MINUTES · ENGLISH ADAPTATION / BILINGUAL DEVELOPMENT · IN DEVELOPMENT

CORE PITCH

The First Gospel asks players to revise, censor, preserve, or sanctify Adèle's original words, turning textual editing into an ethical act of authorship and institutional violence.

PREMISE

Before Adèle becomes a Mother Goddess in public memory, someone must write the language that makes her readable as one. The First Gospel takes place inside the first editorial process around her words. Players receive fragments of Adèle's speech, notes, pain, fatigue, refusal, and unfinished testimony, then decide how those fragments will be revised for institutional use. The experience is not an investigation. It is a writing room where refusal can become devotion, exhaustion can become grace, and a person can be turned into a sacred function one sentence at a time.

PLAYER EXPERIENCE

Players handle short textual fragments and choose whether to preserve, soften, redact, rearrange, annotate, or sanctify them. The central action is editing, not deduction. Each revision affects how Adèle will be remembered: as scientist, mother, victim, saint, risk, witness, or unstable voice. The final text becomes a proto-gospel - not because it is true, but because it is clean enough to be repeated.

FORMAT

- Players: 2-3 players + optional facilitator
- Duration: approx. 45-75 minutes
- Space: tabletop archive theatre or writing table
- Facilitation: optional reader / timekeeper / compiler
- Materials: text fragments, revision cards, pencils, final gospel template
- Interaction: editing, redaction, annotation, final reading

THEMES

Language · Censorship · Sacred text · Authorship · Institutional revision · Refusal

WHY IT FITS

The First Gospel is small, sharp, and workshop-friendly. It can run with printed cards, pencils, revision sheets, and a final reading of the compiled text. It is especially suitable as a short companion experience, pre-show activity, writing-table installation, or low-cost English-language sample because it demonstrates the archive's central concern through a simple, playable action.

DEVELOPMENT STATUS

The project is currently in development as a compact companion piece and possible sample format. This one-page pitch is intended for private review. A short sample kit can include sample text fragments, revision options, editor roles, a final gospel template, and content / safety note.

CONTENT NOTE

Content note: death, institutional control, bodily autonomy, religious language, censorship, psychological pressure, and implied coercion. The religious language is fictional and institutional; it examines myth-making and textual control, not any real-world religion.

A myth can begin as a sentence that someone decided to make cleaner.