

The Adèle Archive: The Silent Reliquarians

A 60-minute object-based immersive archive reconstruction and companion piece to She Was Not a Goddess: The Adèle Archive.

OBJECT-BASED ARCHIVE RECONSTRUCTION · SOLO / SMALL GROUP + FACILITATOR · APPROX. 60 MINUTES · ENGLISH ADAPTATION / BILINGUAL DEVELOPMENT · IN DEVELOPMENT

CORE PITCH

The Silent Reliquarians invites participants to sort the belongings left in Adèle's room after her death, turning each object into a judgement about evidence, privacy, memory, and institutional possession.

PREMISE

Long after Adèle's death, a reconstructed room is assembled from damaged records, relic inventories, temple documents, and fragments of testimony. Participants enter not as detectives, cleaners, or ghost hunters, but as temporary reliquarians inside an archive reconstruction. Their task is to handle what remains: objects of research, fatigue, childhood, pain, resistance, and ordinary life. Each item asks the same question in a different form: should this be preserved, transferred, concealed, destroyed, removed from the institution, or returned?

PLAYER EXPERIENCE

Participants handle objects and read brief archive notes. The experience is quiet, tactile, and low-pressure. Every object performs multiple functions: it proves something about Adèle's lived reality, reveals how the institution misread her, connects to the larger archive, and forces an ethical decision about its future. The outcome is not one correct solution, but a pattern of handling: what the players protect, expose, hide, return, or erase.

FORMAT

- Players: solo or small group, with optional facilitator
- Duration: approx. 60 minutes
- Space: table installation, reading room, or intimate immersive room
- Facilitation: optional guide / archive operator
- Materials: object props, relic cards, classification sheet, final statement
- Interaction: tactile sorting, archive notes, ethical classification

THEMES

Object-led storytelling · Archive ethics · Domestic evidence · Institutional misreading · Privacy · Memory

WHY IT FITS

This piece is highly adaptable as an installation table, pre-show experience, small-group immersive piece, museum-style archive station, or Jubensha-adjacent prologue. Its object-led structure makes it easy to test with paper props first and expand later into physical design, sound, lighting, or guided facilitation.

DEVELOPMENT STATUS

The project is in development as a workshop-friendly companion piece. This one-page pitch is intended as a concise overview rather than a full script submission. A short sample kit can include an object list, sample relic cards, classification sheet, final statement template, and content / safety note.

CONTENT NOTE

Content note: death, institutional control, bodily autonomy, medicalised language, religious language, grief, object handling, and implied coercion. The project does not endorse dehumanising institutional language; such language appears as part of the fictional system being critiqued.

To preserve a relic is also to decide who may touch the life it came from.
